Disability - A Great Career

Brianna's Story

Disability Support Worker

It's rewarding knowing that you've made a positive impact.

One of my closest friends suggested I apply for a job as a support worker while I was studying for a Bachelor of Psychology. Working part-time as a Disability Support Worker provided me with valuable practical experience which I didn't get in my studies. I don't believe I would have had the skills or confidence to start my new journey as a Child Protection Worker after I completed my studies without this job. The experiences and people I was exposed to enabled me to develop personally and professionally to a massive extent.

Tasin's Story

Short Term Accommodation Manager

Working in Disability is more than just a job.

I started volunteering when I was 18 which opened a career pathway for me. I have worked in a range of roles including Disability Support Worker, Lead Support Worker, Team Lead and currently, Short Term Accommodation Manager. Each of these roles helped me to identify the skills and leadership experience that I needed to progress my career in the sector.

It is incredibly rewarding and I encourage you to experience this for yourself.
